Conkling goes to New York.

Conkling left Albany to-night for New York, called away by legal business. He will return to Albany as soon as the business is completed.

Faction in the Factions.

A [illegible] Albany special says: There is trouble in the camp of the administration men, growing out of the multitude of candidates. The difficulty is to find a stalwart who can break the Conkling column. Depew men want Cornell, others want Crowley or Lapham. There is intriguing in each direction. Friends of Conkling are bolder this morning than at any time during the contest. The stalwart organ calls upon the republicans to retain Conkling as the leader of the party, and asks his opponents to name their man who is to take his place as leader.

This meeting, connected with the fact of Mackay's sudden return from Europe and quick departure for Nevada, created considerable comment among those interested in mining shares.

The New York Money Market.

NEW YORK BUSINESS MEN

Approve the Civil Service Reform Rule in the Custom House—The Sugar Question Considered.

NEW YORK, June 2.—At a meeting of the chamber of commerce to-day Mr. James M. Brown, a banker, presiding, a resolution was adopted declaring that the system of examination for appointment to places in the custom house, which has existed during the last two years, has been of substantial value to the mercantile community and should be continued and extended.

A committee, appointed to prepare a reply to Secretary Sherman's letter to Chandler last February in reference to collection of duties on sugar, presented their report. They declare the secretary's letter to be evasive, as no attempt was made in it to refute the facts set forth on behalf of importers. Referring to the trial of the last case of Welch vs. Merritt, at last term of the U. S. circuit court, they say: "In the trial of that case importers offered no evidence whatever in rebuttal of the testimony of treasury witnesses. They claimed that they were conducting their business within the law, and were satisfied to rest their case solely on the law. The court sustained the importers, and notwithstanding all the evidence introduced by the treasury department, directed the jury to find a verdict for plaintiffs. We make a point of the result of this trial because it is a refutation of an allegation set forth by Mr. Sherman in his letter and confirmation of the position taken by the chamber. It is conceded on all hands that for the purpose of evading duties it is a fraud to color sugar after it becomes sugar. Scientific treasury agents told the secretary that sugar became sugar as soon as crystals formed in the product from the canes, but of course this was not the sugar of commerce; and so far the court has sustained the position of the merchants, upon which as a matter of law they rest their case, namely, that so long as the article in question is the sugar of commerce its color by comparison with the Dutch standard is the sole test of dutiable classification." In conclusion the committee remark that the treasury department cannot secure the kindly aid and good will of merchants, for which Sherman expressed a desire, when merchants are in a wholesale way charged with fraud and without any evidence in support of the charge.

Col. Frederick A. Conkling, brother of ex-Senator Conkling, made a long speech in which he upheld the course of secretary Sherman in refusing to rescind his order of Sept. 23, 187[illegible], or refund alleged excess of duties on sugar collected under its provisions. The committee's report was then adopted, Conkling alone voting in the negative.

A letter was read from James E. Ward & Co. enclosing a copy of a letter sent by them to Secretary Windom regarding the refusal of Collector Merritt to grant clearance to their steamship Newport on the ground of smuggling by members of the crew. Ward & Co. say: "We claim that the interpretation given to the U. S. laws by the officers administering the divisions of the custom house, is, to say at least, an unfair one. We cannot believe that it was the intention of any government or legislature to make the innocent suffer for the guilty. Further than this, these officers decline to prosecute men caught in the act of smuggling, but claim the right of holding the ship and her master for the offense, when a written report of the officers making one seizure stated that cigars were found on the person of some of the crew who were attempting to land them."

BUSINESS FOR MAY.

The Largest Ever Recorded at the Clearing Houses—Extraordinary Increase at New York and Boston.

NEW YORK, June 2.—From the Public: [illegible] Exchanges show [illegible] general stagnation in trade which have been persistently circulated in the vicinity of the Stock Exchange are not in accord with the facts. The amount at New York last week has been exceeded only three times in the history of the clearing house, although it was the fourth week of the month, and dealings in stocks [illegible]. Exchanges at Boston last week were the largest ever known at that or any other American city except New York. The aggregate [illegible] this city has never been equalled in the fourth week of any month, usually the smallest and most depressed in any week. In comparison with the corresponding week of last year gains appear at every city except [illegible] and the decrease at San Francisco is insignificant. An increase of 41 per cent. at Boston is especially remarkable. It should be remembered that returns for last month [illegible] differ essentially from those for other weeks in May. The aggregate for New York May 1, $[illegible], is the largest monthly report in the history of the clearing house. Nor was this extraordinary amount due to unprecedented dealings in stocks, for after deducting double the market value of stocks sold the remaining exchanges for the month were at least $3,0[illegible],150,097 against $2,829,028,142 for the month of January, hitherto the largest on record, and the aggregate for all cities outside of New York, though not yet precisely known, will closely approach and may exceed that of last December, $1,[illegible], which has never been exceeded in any other month. All these comparisons show clearly that the volume of business has been surprisingly large and that no expectations are reliable which are based upon the supposition that the general business of the country has been dull or declining in volume.

Exchanges do not show whether people have been making or losing money, but they do show with greater fidelity than any other source of information whether dealings and payments have been large or small. Having in mind the fact that the course of prices during the past month has been generally upward though changes in most instances have been moderate, and that there has been no disturbance in the money market. We are forced to infer that the business of the country has been not only unprecedented in volume but on the whole unusually prosperous.

Drawing the Lines.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—The treasury department will tomorrow issue another circular letter relative to excursion steamers, for information of officers of the inspection service in general as well as for information of the traveling public, who are invited to present to the proper officers authenticated proofs of violations of steamboat laws, in order that offenders may be prosecuted. Inspectors will be required to exact from captains and owners strict compliance in all cases with instructions.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—Samples of flour or other powdered substances are declared unmailable except when put up in transparent bags and so sealed that no particles can sift through. The bags must be enclosed in boxes or tubes made of [illegible] metal with sliding or clasp or screw [illegible] sharp corners.

The treasury department to-day purchased [illegible] ounces of fine silver for delivery at the San Francisco, Carson and Philadelphia mints.

Forthcoming Appointments.

It is very generally expected that [illegible] of Indiana, will be appointed [illegible] in the treasury department in place of [illegible], to be transferred to the position of sixth auditor.

A Roman Catholic View.

In an interview with Archbishop Wood, [illegible] Philadelphia [illegible] a question [illegible] how he regarded the work of the revisers, the reverend gentleman replied: "It is, really, none of our business [illegible] know, except as a literary work, as the revisers have left all doctrinal points just where they were in the James version. In some changes that have been made the revisers have simply returned to the text as it has been in the Latin Vulgate, which has been, in the judgment of the Roman Catholic church for over thirteen hundred years, the true and authentic copy. Take, for instance, the words, 'For thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory, forever and ever, amen.' That has been dropped from the Lord's prayer by the revision committee. Not only Erasmus testified that addition, but Bullinger [illegible] avowed it to be a mere patch sewed to the prayer. Perhaps I cannot do better in order to give you a representative expression of the Roman Catholic opinion on this general subject than to refer you to the remark of Ward in his Errata, where he says: 'The Holy Scriptures were written by the prophets, apostles and evangelists; the Old Testament in Hebrew, except only some few parts in Chaldee and Syriac, the greatest part of the New Testament was written in Greek, St. Matthew's Gospel in Hebrew, and St. Mark's in Latin. We have not at this day the original writings of these prophets and apostles, nor of the seventy interpreters who translated the Old Testament in Greek about three hundred years before the coming of Christ; we have only copies, for the truth and exactness whereof we must rely on the testimony and tradition of the church, which, in so important a point, God would never permit to err; so that we have not the least doubt that the copy, authorized and approved by the church, is sufficiently authentic. For what avail it for a Christian to believe that the scripture is the word of God if he be uncertain what copy and translation is true? Yet, notwithstanding the necessity of admitting some true authentic copy, Protestants claim that there is none authentic in the world, as may be seen in the preface to the Tigurine edition of the Bible, and in all their books of controversy, seeing therein they condemn the Council of Trent for declaring that the old translation is authentic, and yet themselves name no other for such, and, therefore, though the Lutherans fancy Luther's translation, the Calvinists that of Geneva, the Zuinglians that of Zuinglius, the English sometimes one and sometimes another; yet, because they do not hold any one to be authentic, it follows, from their exceptions to the infallibility of the Roman Catholic church in declaring or decreeing a true and authentic copy of Scripture, and their confession of uncertainty of their own translations, that they have no certainty of scripture at all, nor even of faith, which they ground upon Scripture alone.'"

The Fine Old Toad.

A FABLE, FROM THE NEW YORK WORLD.

A fine old toad, which imagined it had a jewel in its head (though the jewel proved in the end to be only a maggot), refused to listen to the small toads, not only when they attempted to abuse it, but even when they had valuable information to communicate. At length the small toads did nothing but tell the fine old toad how big and pretty he was, and that if he would only sit on the railway he could upset the locomotive. The fine old toad got on the rail, but when he saw the locomotive coming he jumped off into the ditch, thinking everybody would hasten to pick him up and set him back after the engine had passed. But in spite of all the prospects of the small toads, nobody came, and the fine old toad was left in the ditch.

Mr. Emerson's Poetry.

[From the Westminster Review.]

Why is Emerson's poetry so little welcomed by the general public? Probably because he cannot tell a tale, cannot construct a story, and has never given us a hint that he can draw a character. Where great poets are strong, Emerson is weak. In the very points upon which the popularity of great poets rests Emerson is deficient. He is weak in human interest. Men and women delight in [illegible] and want it, and not in pale abstractions.

Another Word on the Revision.

Whatever may be [illegible] it ought to be [illegible] that the impetus which will be given to biblical study by the revision has been more [illegible] certainly recognized on all hands, and there is very little ground to fear that the changes made will have any tendency to lessen the popular reverence for the Word of God.

It was Hardly Accurate.

[From the New York World.]

It seems to be admitted that ex-Senator Conkling threw himself out of a three story window, having first tied Mr. Platt by the ears to his coat tails, under the impression that a pile of feather beds lay in the court yard below to receive him. Was this impression accurate?

"Say, mister," said a man as he entered the office, "is the editor in?" "Yes," replied that overworked individual, looking over his glasses. "Well, I thought you was the chap. I wanted to tell you about a boy of mine; you ought to have him; he's just the fellow you ought to have on your paper; he's [illegible]

The Riot at Clonmel, County Tipperary, Ireland.

A BATTLE BETWEEN THE POLICE AND THE PEOPLE.

A Catholic Archbishop Takes up the Irish Side of the Irish Cause—English Claims [illegible] Confederate Bonds [illegible] a Good Hope—Etc.

SPECIAL DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.

NEW YORK, June 2.—A [illegible] tells the story of the origin and progress of the agrarian riot at Clonmel, County Tipperary, Ireland. [illegible] Maher had been arrested [illegible] Capt. Stack [illegible] ordered to read the riot act [illegible] Capt. Stack produced the act, and several [illegible] implored him not to read it as if he did the consequences would be terrible. Stone throwing did not cease, and as Capt. Stack after reading the riot act pronounced the words "God save the queen" a stone smashed the skull of another policeman standing beside him. The unfortunate man died last evening. The police charged on the people with fixed bayonets, and at the same time the cavalry dashed in among the crowd.

Frightful confusion followed. The charge of the cavalry down the short street was [illegible]. Several horses and riders dashed through shop windows at the end of the street. The air was filled with stones and bricks and frightened shop keepers who were endeavoring to put up the shutters were hurled to the ground [illegible]. Several hussars were unhorsed by the crowd and trampled by the horses of their comrades coming behind them. The charge through the streets lasted fully half an hour. A portion of the crowd fled while others, undismayed, faced the [illegible] and battered [illegible] with stones. The hussars used the flat of their swords freely, [illegible] with a serious [illegible]. His horse stumbled and fell [illegible] the prostrate horse and rider. [illegible] the horses had galloped up the street, and the men had [illegible] themselves from the [illegible] until they were rescued. Owing to the efforts of the priests, several of whom received many hard knocks, the people were induced finally to disperse. A soldier of the 16th regiment was so seriously injured that his life is despaired of. Doctors say that the [illegible] will be insane. About 40 citizens were seriously wounded.

An Extraordinary Speech on the Irish Question by Archbishop Croke.

DUBLIN, June 2.—Archbishop Croke, at Thurles yesterday, delivered a most extraordinary [illegible]

[illegible] England not by physical force, [illegible] but by moral means. We want to make our grievances known before the entire world, to tell France, and Spain, and Italy, and the United States, and the great [illegible] that under the sway of Great Britain, that in this country we have been kept down by bayonets [illegible] present time, and as by bayonets we [illegible] down at present, please God we are fully determined whether [illegible] or no bayonets—(great cheering)—to proclaim at all events our want and claim, and that we will not be satisfied until we get our rights, and will enlist in our behalf not swords nor guns but the opinion of France, Spain, Italy and the United States, but the intelligent opinion of all intelligent nations of the world.

This is not a revolutionary movement, nor is it an irreligious movement, but it is conducted by the most religious people in the world, and backed by the best, most holy, most sacrificing, most faithful and most uncompromising priesthood in the world. (Great cheering.) It is not an unjust movement [illegible] or designed to do injury to anybody. We repudiate that charge. We say, we do not intend to do injury to any mortal man. We recognize the rights of owners of the soil and we recognize our own rights at the same time, and while we give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's we will assert for ourselves the things that are ours. (Loud cheers.) What we want is a chance for our lives in our own country, and we will forget the past. We will forget the numberless tyrannies of England, all the tears we have shed, massacres that have been committed, the extermination of our race and the downfall, so far as it was possible for them to accomplish it, of our dear country, and we will begin a new score with a dominant country. We will let them see that we are not only able to flourish abroad but that in our own land we cannot be suppressed. (Cheers.) There are disagreements among the leaders of the people; but those things are exaggerated. Our phalanx is unbroken, our spirit is unsubdued and the result is, therefore, clear as the day. We must succeed."

LONDON, June 2.—According to a recent census the population of London is 3,814,571.

A Forlorn Hope.

LONDON, June 2.—The Times, in its financial article, says: The fact of a meeting of Confederate bondholders being held deserves notice, although the first impression undoubtedly will be that nothing could be more hopeless than the position of creditors of the Confederacy, as there is a clause in the American constitution forbidding recognition of such loans. The meeting, however, appointed a very influential committee consisting of Campbell, Martin, Merritts & Paine, Walker and Sir Henry Tyler. The hope of those interested is that the southern states will attempt to borrow money in this market and can be treated in default unless they recognize those loans. The Union has no equitable right to release them from obligations incurred in their capacity as sovereign states. This seems a very poor foundation for a claim, which the United States opposes, but it is a fact that cotton bonds of the Confederacy have been recently dealt in here at 5 per cent., and dollar bonds at [illegible] per cent. It is to be hoped when a state is in default [illegible] exchange will refuse to grant quotation [illegible] loan.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

It Will Adhere to the Old Version.

NEW YORK, May [illegible]—[illegible] Dr. Alexander McLean, secretary of the American Bible Society, and Rev. Dr. Gilman, of the same institution, will be able to dispel any fears or anticipations that the old version is likely to be displaced by the new for many years to come.

"Now that the new version is out, Dr. McLean," said the reporter, "what is the position of your society in regard to the old one?"

"Considering that this is the first day the new version has been offered to the public for sale," replied the doctor, "it would be impossible in the first place, to give an opinion on it. So far as the new version affects us, its publication cannot interfere with our ordinary work, at least for a year to come."

"How is that?"

"By the terms of our constitution no change can be made in any of our methods of publication except at an annual meeting. We held our annual meeting last week and we did not touch upon the subject of the revised version at all. We will therefore continue to issue the New Testament as heretofore for at least a year to come. At the same time I may say [illegible] that the views of the society were expressed at the annual meeting in 1880 when the matter came under consideration. By our constitution it is provided that the only copies in the English language to be circulated by the society shall be the version now in common use. [illegible] At the meeting in 188[illegible] it was reported as follows: 'No opportunity will be afforded to this board of managers [illegible] to the public in advance of its publication to decide upon the merits of this revision, and differences of opinion, if not of controversy, may arise in respect both to the text and the [illegible] in which it is clothed. In a matter affecting the interests of the whole English speaking [illegible] await the verdict of competent judges, based not alone or chiefly upon the high reputation of the learned men who have devoted [illegible] time to the work, but upon the [illegible] which embodies the results of their long study and [illegible]. When the verdict of the [illegible] scholarship on both sides of the Atlantic has been rendered and the sentiment of the friends and supporters of the society have found expression through proper [illegible] it will be eminently proper for the American Bible Society to take such action as may then be deemed expedient.' [illegible]

"The reason, or at least a chief reason, for [illegible] the fact that it would lead to confusion, because the New Testament contains a number of references to passages in the Old and the quotations under the circumstances would be unsatisfactory."

"Do you think the new version will find favor among the laity?"

"It is a difficult thing to forget the familiar words taught to us in childhood and endeared to us for a lifetime. Our present version has lasted unmolested and undisturbed, for 250 years. The British and Foreign Bible Society was organized in 1804; our American Bible Society was organized in 1816. Our present version is, then, familiar wherever the English language is spoken, and it will not be so easy for adults to forget it or accept a change."

Rev. Dr. Gilman pointedly remarked that having for many years become familiar with favorite passages of Shakespeare, he would not, even though it were pointed out that Shakespeare never wrote the lines, wish that one word should be erased from them. Dr. Gilman seemed to think that the old version would continue to hold its ground while the present grown generation lived, and that the revised version belonged only to the coming Sunday schools.

Change of Opinion.

The St. Paul Pioneer-Press, one of the journals which strongly and even bitterly opposed Mr. Villard and his movement on the Northern Pacific, now speaks of him and his undertaking with actual favor. It says:

Mr. Villard uses an argument the force of which all must admit. He says that his interest in the Northern Pacific enterprise is larger than his interest in any other railroad and that it naturally follows that he doesn't intend pursuing any policy detrimental to that interest. He practically denies the charge that he is hostile to the building of the Cascade branch from Snake river to Puget Sound. He seems to think, however, that the building of the line from Portland to Kalama, the gap which still remains to be closed, between Tacoma and the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company's lines should be first undertaken. He argues that this gap is only sixty miles long, and, when finished, would supply rail communication between Puget Sound and Pend d'Oreille division of the road, now nearly completed. The Villard system is becoming a very comprehensive one, as he and his friends have recently acquired the Oregon and California lines running south from Portland and the valley of the Willamette river, of itself an extensive system, soon to be connected with San Francisco by rail. The young [illegible] makes a splendid showing for his system, and it would seem that the Northern Pacific might profit greatly by becoming a part of it.

Reply from Mr. Muir.

The following reply from Mr. John Muir, general freight and passenger agent of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Co., addressed to the shippers of the [illegible] will explain itself.

GEORGE ELIOT AND HER ADORERS.

[illegible] in The Nineteenth Century.

[illegible] sympathetic natures to feel [illegible] were [illegible] by the [illegible] with whom they [illegible] to have [illegible]. Mrs. Lewes was conscious of a temptation to agree [illegible] reading [illegible] as if it were [illegible] with the views she did not really share, and she acknowledged a debt of gratitude to Mr. Lewes for the scrupulous anxiety that she should not be biased in that way by him. He was careful to guard her mental independence even against her own too great readiness to defer to another, even to [illegible] that [illegible] might be herself.

Such obligations as these can be mentioned. It is scarcely possible, without intruding on the sanctity of private life, to allude to the perfect union between these two, which lent half its charm to all worship paid at the shrine of George Eliot. She herself has spoken somewhere of the element of almost maternal tenderness in a man's protecting love; this passionate, unwearying care for which no trifles are too small, watched over her own life, he stood between her and the world, he received her from all those minor cares which chafe and fret the artist's soul; he wrote her letters, a proceeding for which he would say laughingly her correspondents were not grateful; in a word he so smoothed the course of her outer life as to leave all her powers free to do what she alone could do for the world and for the many who looked to her for help and guidance. No doubt this devotion brought its own reward, but we are exacting for our idols and do not care to have even a generous error to condone, and therefore we are glad to know that great as his reward was, it was no greater than was merited by the most faithful, perfect love that ever crowned a woman's life. All those who pleased themselves by giving that name to their love and admiration were content to know that their devotion was welcome to the one whose devotion exceeded theirs, their fellow-worshiper, George Henry Lewes, who counted it, I think, for his chief glory to take the lead in this culture. And here let us encounter what has been said or whispered by some who knew that George Eliot was the center of a throng of ardent worshipers, and doubted, perhaps, in Bacon's phrase, whether it was possible to love and be wise, or, at all events, to be wise in loving with the unreserve of enthusiasm of admiration common to those for whom George Eliot was the one woman in the world, the enthroned lady whose colors they wore between their heart and their armor. It is not usual for men or women to be called on to justify in words their strong feelings of personal attachment. These are usually accepted as an ultimate fact, and when we see such feelings existing with unwonted strength between two otherwise commonplace individuals, we conclude that they cannot both be wholly commonplace, since one at either can have an exceptional power of love or [illegible]

[illegible] none of them were rash enough to play the [illegible] before so keen a judge.

In friendship George Eliot had the [illegible] of a full nature. She was intolerant of a vacuum in the mind or character, and she was indifferent to admiration that did not seem to have its root in fundamental agreement with those first principles she held to be most "necessary to salvation." Where this sympathy existed, her generous affection was given to a fellow-believer, [illegible] with singularly little reference to the fact that [illegible] full sympathy was never [illegible] with profound love and reverence for herself as a living witness to the truth and power of the principles thus shared. To love her was a strenuous pleasure, for in spite of her tolerance for all human weakness that was natural to her, and the scrupulous charity of her overt judgments, the fact remained that her natural standard was ruthlessly out of reach, and it was a painful discipline for her friends to feel that she was compelled to lower it to suit their infirmities. The intense humility of her self appreciation, and the unfeigned readiness with which she would even lower herself with any sinner who sought her counsel, had the same effect upon those who could compare what she condemned in herself with what she tolerated in them. And at the same time, no doubt, this total absence of self-sufficiency had something to do with the passionate tenderness with which commonplace people dared to cherish their immortal friend.

She came as a very angel of consolation to those persons of sufficiently impartial mind to find comfort in the hint that the world might be less to blame than they were as to those points on which they found themselves in chronic disagreement with it. But she had nothing welcome for those whose idea of consolation is the promise of a deus ex machina by whose help they may gather grapes of thorns and figs of thistles. She thought that there was much needed doing in the world, and criticism of our neighbors and the natural order might wait at all events until the critic's own character and conduct were free from blame. Imperfect agents might lend a hand in mending what was amiss, it was only unhelpful criticism that stirred her anger; and the observation may have been present to her mind that people usually have a sneaking kindness for their own handwork, even while it continues to fall short of the desired perfection. One who does not care for china in itself will survey with complacency a neatly mended fracture, and her severity in this direction must have been due to the perception that long orations upon the evils of creation proceed most readily from the lips of those who are otherwise at little pains to lessen the evils. To a friend who once playfully called her optimist, she responded, "I will not answer to the name of optimist, but if you like to invent Meliorist, I will not say you call me out of my name." She felt so strongly that there was a worse and a better, almost at every turn in every life; and this being so, since it was in the power of human beings again and again to help each other to prefer and reach the better, the continuous passive dwelling upon all the possibilities of evil, whether in resentment or despair, assumed in her eyes the shape of a folly closely verging on crime.

THE FIRST STAR ROUTE.

[From the Denver Tribune.]

A [illegible] United States [illegible] Governor Gilpin [illegible] a party of [illegible] with him in the Windsor [illegible] yesterday, [illegible] that it is not the first time [illegible] the senate to [illegible] routes and to [illegible] weeks and months [illegible]. It was so in 18[illegible] just as that [illegible] in the proceedings to some extent [illegible]. It was the Oregon question which was then [illegible] attention and which was afterward [illegible] war with Mexico. There were then no less than forty-two public men in the [illegible] who were presidential aspirants, and all [illegible] digging their own graves in the sands along the Atlantic."

"But you spoke of having had some connection with the discussion; what was it?" inquired some one.

"Oh, simply this: It was about a mail route, a great transcontinental mail service, concerning what you may consider the original star route. It was in the days of the giants, Benton, Clay, Calhoun, Randolph, Dallas and Webster. I knew them all. I had been across the continent as a lieutenant in the army, and had returned with a recommendation that a mail route should be established overland from Independence, Mo., then the extreme western point of civilization in the United States, to the mouth of the Columbia river, some 2000 miles across plains and mountains. Senator Niles, of Connecticut, an old friend and an old time democrat, was chairman of the post office committee, and had asked me to write a paper to be submitted with the committee's report, and I did so. I told them of the vast, the limitless domain, which stretched out to the westward from the great Mississippi river; of its great plains, great mountain ranges, big forests, hinted at the mineral resources, calculated for them the number of wild animals; buffaloes; foretold that the country would one day be covered with a network of railroads and suggested that ere the lapse of a century the travel and the mails to Eastern Asia and Australia would pass through this section.

"Laughed at? Yes, I was. I was ridiculed. The Boston Traveler, the New York Herald and the Baltimore [illegible] denounced the scheme as wild and visionary. But that made no difference. The people wanted the information. Well, the matter came up in the senate. My report had been printed and sent in with the committee's recommendations. The motion was to print 10,000 copies of my report. I saw that there was a hurried consultation between several senators, including Calhoun, Webster, Dayton and others, and I soon saw the result, then explained by a motion from Dayton, the most powerful of them all in the use of irony, to expunge the entire matter as irrelevant and unworthy the dignity of the senate. He made a speech of some length in which the new far section of the country was treated in a most disrespectful manner. Dayton was followed by [illegible], who took the other side."

"Were the proceedings reported?"

"No, sir. Some of the senators took especial pains to go to the reporters and request that the matter [illegible] [illegible] enough."

"Benton talk, I suppose?"

"Yes, I was sitting just behind him when he arose. [illegible] He addressed the presiding officer and for nearly half an hour he poured the vials of his wrath upon the proposition and upon me. He looked as stiff as if a ramrod had been forced down him. He denounced me in open terms as a visionary and was terribly severe upon my presumption in venturing to come into the senate with a report which he had [illegible] repeatedly introduced. There was a young man, he said, [illegible] willing to throw off my sentimental [illegible] and take a seat among the gravest [illegible] of the nation in the senate."

"And Webster?"

"Yes, Webster spoke too. [illegible] his usual [illegible] manner and began [illegible] with a denunciation of the measure, closing with a few [illegible] remarks concerning the country at large. 'What do we want,' he exclaimed, 'with this vast, worthless area? This region of savages and wild beasts, of deserts of shifting sands and whirlwinds of dust, of cactus and prairie dogs? To what use could we ever hope to put these great deserts or those endless mountain ranges, impenetrable and covered to their very base with eternal snow? What can we ever hope to do with the western coast, a coast of 3000 miles, rock-bound, cheerless, uninviting, and not a harbor on it? What use have we for this country?' The young man should be sent home at once."

DEFECTS IN THE JURY SYSTEM

This is not altogether a novel subject. Few discussions, indeed, are more trite; and yet to every community the imperfections of the jury system are likely to make the subject at any time a fresh one. Is revision of the jury law a hopeless project? Many, indeed most, seem to think so; yet there are few who would not look upon a practicable effort to revise it as a public boon. The defects of the system are grave and innumerable. Important criminal trials are usually long and always expensive to the state. It often happens that they are continued through many weeks, and not unfrequently months pass by before the end is reached. It would be remarkable if the twelve jurors, promiscuously taken from the people, should always escape death, sickness and other causes of incapacity, and continue intact as a body during these protracted periods. It would be still more extraordinary if they should uniformly agree in their verdict. Yet, unless this improbable result is reached and a unanimous verdict is returned by the twelve men who first entered the jury box, the trial is a failure, the time and money spent on it are thrown away, and the accused is left to suffer the law's unnecessary delay in spite of the constitutional guarantee which entitles him to a speedy trial. This feature of the administration of justice, which is a relic of an age when the law was in a crude state, has been suffered to remain without change, in England and the United States, for at least four centuries, notwithstanding the objections to it have been forcibly shown by publicists, and its mischievous results amply illustrated by experience.

Readers of that admirable book, "Green's History of the English People," will find a clear statement of the origin of the jury system, in the account of the reign of Henry the Second. The fabric of English judicial legislation, of which we are full heirs, commences in the year 1166, with the assize of Clarendon. In the provisions of this assize for repression of crime we find the origin of the trial by jury, so often attributed to earlier times. Twelve lawful men of each hundred, with four men from each township, were sworn to present those who were known or reputed as criminals within their district for trial by ordeal. The jurors were thus not merely witnesses, but sworn to act as judges also in determining the value of the charge; and it is this double character of Henry's jurors that has descended to our "grand jury;" who still remain charged with the duty of presenting criminals for trial after examination of the witnesses against them. Two later steps brought the jury to its modern condition. Under Edward the First witnesses acquainted with the particular fact in question were added in each case to the general jury, and by separation of these two classes of jurors at a later time the latter simply became "witnesses" without any judicial power, while the first ceased to be witnesses at all, and became our modern jurors, who are only judges of the testimony given.

It is not too strong an expression to say that the jury system which now exists in England and in this country is an anomaly in modern law. Other branches of jurisprudence have grown and developed with time, have kept pace with the march of civilization, have been shaped to meet the altered conditions and sentiments of society, and have been improved by the light of experience. But the jury of to-day is an institution so ancient that till recently writers have not been able to agree as to its origin; and in its main features it is still the same as it was in the days of the early Tudors. In the number of jurors, the mode of their selection, the necessity of a unanimous verdict by the twelve originally impaneled, and in other respects, it has been for centuries the same crude, unwieldy, uncertain institution for dealing with all criminal wrongs without distinction as to their degree or nature. Whether the accused is charged with a petty offense or the blackest crime known to the law, whether the determination of the question of guilt or innocence requires the highest degree of intelligence and special qualifications, or merely the intellectual acquirements of the "average juror," are distinctions of which the system takes no cognizance. It is not strange then that the necessity of radical changes has at various times been urged by high authorities, and some writers have even gone so far as to favor the abolition of this system. Of course, the latter is a reckless view which deserves no countenance. But it is the part of wisdom to consider whether the system may not be greatly improved by such a modification as will retain its advantages and eliminate its defects. It may be that the nineteenth century is not wise enough to amend what the twelfth created. But in support of this conclusion more satisfactory reasons are needed than rhetorical allusions to "the palladium of our liberties" and the veneration due to an institution which has gone unchanged through centuries.

The lack of provision for meeting the case of a lost or disabled juror without sacrificing what has been gained through a long trial has often been illustrated. A more serious defect is shown by the numerous cases in which a second, and even sometimes a third trial is made necessary by the disagreement of the jury. The origin of the principle of a unanimous verdict, which Hallam pronounces "a preposterous relic of barbarism," is left chiefly to conjecture. It is supposed not to have been introduced by a deliberate act of the legislature, but to have been a part of an early practice, of which we have inherited the disadvantages without the advantages. This feature of the jury system has also remained "in all of its integrity" for ages. It is true that the practice of convincing obstinate jurors by a mild course of physical torture has grown somewhat obsolete, and that we no longer make provision for transporting them in open carts from town to town visited by the court until they agree upon a verdict. Nor do we treat the doubting ones with a lenten season, without "meat, drink, or fire, candle-light excepted," until they shall be brought to a conscientious observance of their oaths. But we still give them days and nights of seclusion from the rest of the world, in order that they may better lead their consciences up to a harmonious verdict. The fact that this requirement of unanimity is peculiar to the jury verdicts, and that it is not applied to the decisions of legislative, judicial and popular bodies has not escaped notice or comment, and it has been insisted that the strongest reasons should be shown for an exception so anomalous. Unanimous verdicts in criminal cases are not required in Scotland or on the continent of Europe. The principle has been condemned by Bentham, Locke, Lieber, and other publicists and juridical writers. Some years ago its modification was recommended in a report to parliament, but without success. Arguments have been urged with much force that agreement of two-thirds should be sufficient for a verdict in all civil and criminal trials, except capital cases, in which three-fourths must agree. Although the prevalent system is defended by very able jurists, the opinion is gaining ground that the principle of unanimity is not the true one, and that the sooner a change is made the better.

President Garfield's great mistake has been his attempt to use the offices for the purchase of "harmony" among party leaders. Thereby he has weakened greatly the force of his own fight upon "bossism." Hence the Nation is just in its judgment that the way to break down this system of bullying and corruption is to administer the offices on the principle that the advocates of the system most abhor. To administer them in the old way, only changing the controlling interest to new hands," is to perpetuate the view of the public service which heads Conklings, and which, so long as it is allowed to operate, will make men of Conkling's peculiar talents seem so perpetually powerful that they will never be completely overthrown or brought to naught." Harmony in a party, the president ought to remember, is harmony of opinion and feeling about the ends of government, among the voters. It is not and can not be the satisfaction of a few thousand needy men with the salaries of small offices. Because that is unattainable. Needy men never have enough money and there are not offices enough in the world to satisfy the needy men of the state of New York. "Harmony" through that channel is in politics what the squaring of the circle is in mathematics.

The record of railroad construction for a year past, as summarized by the New York Commercial Bulletin, shows an enormous increase. A greater number of miles of track were laid than in any previous year except in 1871, when 7379 miles of track were laid. For the year ending April 1, 1881, there were constructed [illegible] miles of track on [illegible] lines, varying in length from [illegible] to 340 miles and averaging [illegible] miles each. There were projected 11,277 miles of line on 186 roads, varying from [illegible] miles to 700 miles, and averaging [illegible] miles each. The total constructed and projected line on 320 roads was 20,399 miles. There were 23 miles of line in 1832 in the whole country; there are now approximately 92,500 miles. Thirty-seven projected roads are capitalized at $65,675,050 for a total proposed mileage of 3894, or an average issue of capital stock to the amount of $17,026 per mile. The indications are that the construction for the next year will exceed that for 1881. Materials are much cheaper now than during the years of the greatest expansion, and few of the roads have had to use any foreign capital. Iron rails are worth $46, as against $98 62 in 1865 and $85 in 1872, and steel rails are worth $60, against $158 in 1868 and $112 in 1872.

The arrangement which the secretary of the treasury has just completed for reduction of the interest on a large part of the national debt—whether we consider the magnitude of the sum or the extraordinary nature of the transaction—is without a precedent in this or perhaps any other, country. Congress adjourned without making provision for refunding the maturing debt, amounting in round figures to $700,000,000. Of this sum $300,000,000, bearing 6 per cent. interest, fell due on the 1st May, and $400,000,000, bearing 5 per cent., will be become payable at the option of the government, on the 1st July. The secretary has fully concluded an arrangement under which these 5 and 6 per cent. bonds are all to be taken up, or rather an arrangement under which the interest on them at the old rate shall cease as they mature and the rate of 3½ per cent. be accepted instead; and the bonds are moreover to be returned to the treasury that this contract may be stamped on their face. The annual interest thus saved to the government will amount to $13,500,000. The abundance of money, and the low rate at which it may be had for good security, are exemplified in a remarkable way by this transaction.

A letter from Salem tells us that the report which has reached a correspondent of THE OREGONIAN that warrants are being drawn for construction of the asylum in excess of the appropriation, is unfounded. The expenditure, it is said, will be kept strictly within the appropriation.

That work on the Northern Pacific railroad is being pushed as rapidly as possible is evidenced by the fact that there are now in the field on the waters of the upper Missouri and the upper Columbia no less than fourteen surveying parties, all actively engaged.

The evidence is all in, and the ballistine now going on shows that the coroner's jury—the legislature—has substantially made up a verdict on the defunct statesman. It was a case of involuntary suicide; and they didn't know it was loaded.

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 3, 1881.

CITY.

A SENSATIONAL RUMOR.—Some one, who certainly had very little to do, started the rumor last evening that Councilman J. S. Keller had died very suddenly at his place of business, corner of First and Madison streets. The rumor flew like wildfire, and in a very short space of time several thousand tongues were wagging with accelerated action and circulating the report. Councilman Stolte and several other persons, on hearing the news, went up post haste to his shop. On reaching there they were greatly surprised, and most agreeably too, to find our ponderous alderman alive and in apparent good health. Soon after Mr. Keller got into his buggy and drove down First. Everybody looked amazed and doubted their eyesight. On reaching Alder street Mayor D. P. Thompson, who was on his way to Keller's house to condole with his family and friends, was thunder-struck to see him driving tranquilly down the street. The mayor marched out, and shaking his brawny hand, told him he was the healthiest corpse he had ever seen. It has been suggested that the startling rumor was invented and circulated by some envious fellow who wants to be councilman from the Third Ward, and thus capture the big salary of a city father. But the plan didn't work, and Alderman Keller still lives to sell his meat and make laws for this municipality.

REMARKABLE RUN.—Capt. U. B. Scott's little propeller made the trip yesterday from the Cascades to her wharf at the foot of Morrison street in 3 hours and 16 minutes. She made the run from the Cascades to Vancouver in 2 hours and [illegible] Vancouver to this city in [illegible] minutes. The distance is 66 miles, and her average speed is 20½ miles per hour. She carried [illegible] pounds of steam from the Cascades to Vancouver, and from Vancouver to Portland 140 pounds. She is licensed to carry 150 pounds by her certificate.

BOAT RACE.—At [illegible] past six Saturday evening the annual regatta of the Portland Rowing Association will take place. There will be but one race, between the paper and cedar shells. The former will be manned by Ham Corbett stroke, Capt. Stratton, 3, [illegible] Davis, 2, and Henry Corbett, bow. The crew of the cedar shell will be F. Huntoon, stroke, [illegible] Smith, 3, David Shindler, 2, and C. A. Malarkey, bow. As there is no handicap, the paper shell is certain to win.

NORTHERN PACIFIC SURVEY.—The party of engineers surveying the line from Kalama to Portland, reached Vancouver on Monday, the line striking the Columbia river a few yards below the city limits, near the old wharf. From that point the surveying party crossed the Columbia and are now working their way to Portland, which point will be reached this week. The line from Lewis river keeps above high water mark, around the north side of Vancouver lake.

PICNIC AND BARBECUE.—The picnic and barbecue held at Amity, Yamhill county, under the auspices of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, was a very successful affair. About 2000 persons were in attendance. Hon. H. Y. Thompson of this city delivered the address, which is spoken of in very complimentary terms. An address was also delivered by J. E. Holman, Esq., of Dallas. Music was furnished by the McMinnville, Amity and Lafayette bands.

THE DORE CASE.—The argument in the case of United States vs Pilot Dore was concluded last evening in the U. S. circuit court. At a late hour last evening the court adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning. At that hour Judge Deady will deliver his charge and the case will be submitted to the jury.

STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL.—This evening the ladies of the Christian church give one of their popular social entertainments at Masonic hall, to which they invite all their friends and acquaintances. They purpose to make this the social of the season. The elevator for the use of the aged.

DEATH OF MRS. APPLEGATE.—Cynthia A. Applegate, the beloved wife of Hon. Jesse Applegate, the old and honored pioneer of Oregon, died at her home in the southern part of the state, Wednesday night. The deceased came to Oregon with her husband in 1843.

VANCOUVER FERRY.—The ferry Vancouver No. 2 has arrived from Salem, and is undergoing thorough repairs at this city. The boat will go over to Vancouver next week and make regular trips across the Columbia.

TO THE WHITE HOUSE.—The steamer Washington will leave the foot of Morrison street on Sunday at 10 A. M., 12 M., and 3 P. M. The last trip to Portland will be at 8 P. M.

FUNERAL.—The funeral of little George Pope, who was drowned at Oregon City Wednesday evening, will take place this morning at 11 o'clock from the church at that place.

GAS CONSUMERS.—Remember no discount on gas bills after to-day. Pay up and save one dollar per thousand.

MILITARY AND PERSONAL.

(Vancouver Independent.)

Post Chaplain David White has been ordered to duty in the department of the Columbia.

Lieut. E. S. Farrow, 21st infantry, has recently been at West Point on court martial duty.

Capt. Arthur Morris, 4th artillery, returned to Fort Canby from San Francisco on the last steamer.

A government pack train is at Camp Howard removing stores, and in a short time the post will be finally abandoned.

The Wood river fever recently carried off two soldiers from Boise barracks, and their full cavalry outfit went with them.

Lieut. Louis F. Brant, 1st infantry, a former resident of Vancouver, stationed in Texas, was in Washington two weeks ago on a short trip.

Gen. Howard has issued orders at West Point abolishing the post barber and band playing on Sunday. The movement is not popular with the cadets.

Major A. S. Kimball, disbursing quartermaster of the department, arrived from the east on the last steamer, reporting at headquarters on Tuesday.

Lieut. C. A. Booth, U. S. A., signal service corps, left on Monday's steamer with his family, en route to El Paso, New Mexico, near which place he will be stationed.

There is to be a temperance gathering at the garrison hall on June 15th, evening, at which speakers from abroad are expected to ventilate their opinions on the foolishness of pay-day.

Toussaint Mesplie, chaplain U. S. A., Boise Barracks, has been ordered to make a tour of the posts in this department, on which duty he will leave Boise Barracks about July 1st.

J. C. Tolman, surveyor general of Oregon, is now laying off The Dalles military reservation into town lots, in which shape it will be sold, and the old post of The Dalles will soon be thoroughly retired.

The promotion of Major E. C. Mason, 21st infantry, to lieut-colonel 4th infantry, was due to the retirement of Col. Crittenden, of the 17th, and Col. Smith, of the 14th infantry, and not to retirement of Col. J. S. Mason, as at first supposed.

Col. H. C. Hodges, formerly stationed at Fort Vancouver, has just been designated as chief quartermaster of the Department of Arizona. Capt. E. B. Grimes, who is relieved by Col. Hodges, is granted three months leave of absence before he enters upon his duties in this department.

Lieut. Col. Chambers, 21st infantry, Lieut. J. M. Ross, post quartermaster, Lieut. A. R. Egbert, 2d infantry, Lieut. C. H. Bonesteel, 21st infantry, Lieut. J. S. OVERBOARD

James McConnell, of East Portland, Falls from the Stark Street Pontoon and is Drowned.

At 6:30 Thursday evening a man named James McConnell, while endeavoring to get on board the Stark street ferry, stepped from the pontoon and was drowned. As near as it is possible to obtain, the following are the circumstances of this most unfortunate affair.

McConnell, who it appears, was considerably intoxicated, came down the roadway at the foot of Stark street for the purpose of crossing to the east side. Before he got half way down the slip the ferry started for the other side. McConnell, noticing that the boat had started away, continued to walk down toward the edge of the pontoon. As he neared the edge he increased his gait, and seemed determined to get on board any way. "Little Johnny," the boatman, who was working on the pontoon, pushing [illegible] away with a pike, spoke to McConnell and told him to stop. He said: "Hold on there Mac, you can't make the boat." McConnell, however, disregarded the caution and walked, or rather staggered down toward the extreme end. For a few feet near the edge the planks are wet and very slippery. Just as McConnell stepped on the wet planks his feet went from under him and he fell. He struck on the edge and in a moment slid into the water. At that time the boat was nearly 25 feet away. The strong current and the wind caught poor McConnell and swept him under the pontoon. The boat was stopped as quickly as possible, and every human effort made to save the man's life, but all to no purpose. He never came to the surface again. As soon as grappling hooks were speedily procured and search made for the body. The under side of the pontoon was carefully raked, but the body could not be found. Diligent search was continued until after dark with out the body being recovered. It is quite probable that the body of the unfortunate man after being swept under the pontoon was carried out by the current into deep water.

McConnell lived in a small house in East Portland, near the city park. He has a wife but no children. He was probably 40 years old. While on this side of the water he made his headquarters at [illegible] Tom's sailor boarding house. He was seen drinking several times during the afternoon, and was observed to be partially intoxicated when coming down toward the foot of Stark street. No possible blame can be attached to anyone. The sad accident happened inside of a minute and could not be prevented. The captain and engineer of the ferry boat did everything in their power to avert the accident. The foolhardy attempt to catch the ferry after she had pushed off cost McConnell his life.

It is to be hoped this sad affair will have a tendency to make persons exercise more caution in getting on and off the boat. The foolish habit of jumping off before the ferry stops, or jumping on after she starts, should be prohibited. There is no reason of risking life or limb in repeating the experiment. This is the first accident of the kind which has occurred on the Stark street ferry for nearly twenty years.

Efforts to recover the body will be renewed this morning.

THE REAL ESTATE MARKET.

The following special report of the real estate market is furnished THE OREGONIAN by J. D. Clark, (late Clark & Upton), real estate agent:

The market has been dull during the past week and the transactions few and unimportant. The public mind has been considerably exercised by railroad movements, and the effect has been similar to that produced by a presidential election, which always causes a partial paralysis of the real estate market.

The leasing of the O. R. & N. Co.'s railroad for a period of 99 years by the O. R. & N. Co. has been the great topic amongst real estate dealers. To many who were interested in the immediate construction to the proposed city terminus the change is a considerable disappointment. We are, however, informed that there is a probability that it may be continued to Madison street. In any case we apprehend that the effect of the change will prove to be only a very temporary disturbance, as the greater and more important works of the Northern Pacific and Oregon Railway & Navigation co. are being pushed forward with vigor; and, as all these lines [illegible] to Portland, [illegible] are growing with the growth of [illegible]. These circumstances alone [illegible] lively and well sustained market.

The number of transfers recorded during the past week are 17, at a total of $[illegible], situated as follows: City, [illegible]; [illegible]; Homestead, 1 deed, [illegible]; [illegible] deeds, [illegible]; and the others [illegible].

MAN MISSING—SUPPOSED MURDER.

Our Albany correspondent, writing June 1st, [illegible] of J. A. M[illegible] says: Considerable excitement exists here over the supposed murder of W. W. Francis, a sidewalker of Halsey, Linn county. Mr. Francis went to [illegible] of that vicinity [illegible] and drew the money reported [illegible] twelve dollars. [illegible] a bullet hole in it, and [illegible] coat, a vest and belt were found on the Calapooia [illegible] opposite. His purse was [illegible] quantity of these was found [illegible] When these [illegible] the district attorney, [illegible], Esq., [illegible] telegraphed [illegible] to go to Halsey [illegible] his return. A few minutes ago the answer came back that Mr. Francis had left Halsey yesterday on horseback and was expected home last evening. He did not return. This morning his horse came back to Halsey with a rider and blood on the saddle.

About thirty persons have volunteered to go and search for the body. The general impression is that a foul murder has been committed, the object money, and that the body is in the Calapooia.

LATER.

The following dispatch was received last evening:

ALBANY, June 2d, 1881.

Mr. George F. Simpson and party have returned from Kendall's bridge, and report no signs found of foul play. If murder has been committed, it must have been elsewhere and the articles left there to elude pursuit. The supposition by some is that it is all a hoax, or blind, practiced for some selfish purpose by the man himself.

OREGON MINERAL WATERS.

Consumption of Oregon mineral waters is increasing to very considerable proportions. These waters are furnished chiefly by springs in Clackamas and Linn counties. Demand for mineral waters is everywhere increasing. Bottled and sent away to distant lands, they become a great article of commerce. Mineral waters from Germany find large sale in the United States. And yet, it is very certain that the best of these waters are not more excellent than those which the springs of Oregon so abundantly furnish. It is found that the waters of our mineral springs hold certain substances in solution which have a very invigorating effect upon the human system. The world has been peopled so rapidly that there is, in large towns, a dearth of clean sweet water, and it is no small matter to be assured that the "cup drink" contains a healthy, sparkling beverage, instead of a murky, contaminated one. On analysis it is found that carbonate of lime and chloride of sodium are the chief mineral ingredients, and these minerals, together with the iron and sulphur contained in the water, give it very excellent properties. The water is not only exhilarating, but also cleansing, and it might be said that it clears away obstructions in the system by its action on the digestive organs. The carbonic acid gives the water the fresh, sparkling character, the round and cool rise, its agreeable taste, and when exposed to the air it will not change. It is bottled in stone ware or glass bottles, and when put carefully taken may be kept for a long time cool place lying down. It is very certain that if means are taken to introduce these Oregon mineral waters, they will become a very valuable article of commerce.

RELIGIOUS NOTES.

[Advocate and Sentinel.]

Rev. H. H. Crosier will preach at Rooster Rock settlement the first Sabbath, at Nehalem valley the second, at Lentz the second, and at Mt Tabor the fourth Sabbath of this month.

Next Saturday, June 4th, being the vigil of Pentecost, is a fasting day. Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, June 8, 10 and 11, of next week are ember days, hence also fasting days.

The services at Hall street church last Sabbath were of an encouraging character. Three were received into full connection and two by letter. The general influence of the work at this important point is extending.

Rev. Father Fouquet of the Kootenay missions, arrived here and started yesterday morning for New Westminster, via Victoria. The good father came down on business connected with the Indian tribes under his charge.

Rev. Father Archambault, who was reported convalescent some weeks ago, had another serious relapse from which he is slowly recovering. He ventured to make a fishing trip to Astoria, for the benefit of his impaired health, which it appears produced a contrary effect on his organic system, much reduced by his late malady.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT PACIFIC UNIVERSITY.

The recent commencement exercises [illegible] on Wednesday, [illegible] were [illegible] several students. Mr. M[illegible] [illegible] Mr. [illegible] Whaley [illegible] [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] [illegible]

In the evening a musical entertainment in the shape of a commencement concert was given, and enjoyed by a packed house. The Forest Grove singers were at their best on this, as well as at all the music during the public exercises, by Mrs. J. A. [illegible], Miss R. Carson and Mr. [illegible] of Portland. These solos, duets, instrumental pieces, [illegible] were [illegible], but so far above the writer that he dare not say anything more. Except at the foot of a mountain cannot judge of the altitude of those at the summit.

One enjoyable feature has been the reunion of the class of 1867. Rev. J. F. Walker, having come on a visit from China, the other members, Judge [illegible] A. Bowlby of Astoria and Dr. D. Raffety of East Portland, came to meet him and each other.

Of course we went down to the Indian school. Here are sixty three pupils, forty boys and twenty three girls, from thirteen different tribes. Captain Wilkinson tells us that the boys did every nail in one of the buildings, thirty by sixty feet, as well as aided in the erection of the other of the same size. They have also recently painted both of them, and have made about twenty-five gores. In details [illegible] of them are apprentices to a boot and shoe shop, where they have repaired thirty [illegible] pair of shoes, the work being valued at more than one hundred and fifty dollars. Some of them are also learning the blacksmith's trade, with good success. In the school room they have likewise done well. An air of energy, life and animation is everywhere apparent about the school.

The same teachers are expected to go forward in the institution in the coming year, with some assistance from Mrs. Dr. Minthorn [illegible] for the [illegible] the interests of the school.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

The following is a summary of the inaugural address of Rev. [illegible] at Pacific University:

[illegible]

The speaker then [illegible] the [illegible] this coast [illegible] New England [illegible] But [illegible] of this state is [illegible] and Christian education begin to [illegible].

Neither state institutions, though capable of much, nor the weak denominational institutions, characteristic of the coast can fully supply the need. We must have an institution Christian, not sectarian.

Christians of different denominations must combine for the common good.

The world is awakening to the importance of scientific knowledge, but does not realize the profundity or importance of united religious effort.

Some consideration of the claims to the attention of the northwest of this institution followed. Then the immediate needs of the institution were examined. Its needs, in the line of buildings, three if the president's house be included, besides that a central hall, which should include a commodious chapel, a cabinet and chemical laboratory and recitation rooms, and a ladies' hall. Coeducation of the sexes was earnestly advocated, in connection with the general discussion of the needs and prestige of the institution.

Why can not the women of Oregon, who must be so deeply interested in the education of its girls, provide the much needed for the ladies' hall.

In pursuance of the same line of thought the question was asked, Why cannot the good people of Portland build the main hall and call it Portland Hall? The speaker emphasized strongly the need and the justness of the great northwest's providing here for this own building for all its institutions.

What is hope? A smiling rainbow
Children follow through the wet;
'Tis not here, still yonder, yonder;
Never urchin found it yet.

What is life? A thawing iceboard
On a sea with sunny shore;
Gay we sail; it melts beneath us;
We are sunk and seen no more.

What is man? A foolish baby,
Vainly strives, and fights and frets;
Demanding all, deserving nothing;
One small grave is what he gets.

INVITED TO BREAKFAST.

[Chambers' Journal.]

"Walk out to my house and have breakfast with me some morning." Such was the invitation given me one day by Mr. Robertson, a genial middle-aged solicitor to whom I was articled in the thriving town of Abbey[illegible].

Now, I had only been articled for a few weeks, and what I had seen of Mr. Robertson in business made me wish to know him and his in their private life; hence I was much delighted to have this opportunity of gratifying my wish. A few days afterward, waking up and finding a glorious summer sun streaming into my room, I speedily decided that this was just the kind of morning on which I should accept the invitation to breakfast at Abbey Grove, and in a few minutes I was on my way thither.

Abbey Grove was situated about two miles from the town, and consisted of a small cluster of villas built in a prettily situated spot, which generations ago had formed part of the grounds of an old abbey. The only remains of this old ancient building, however, were a few yards of crumbling wall, with here and there vestiges of what at one time had been traceried windows. These, with numerous mounds of stone and masonry, were all that was now left to tell of what had been there centuries ago. Most of these mounds were now covered with grass and shrubs and trees, and thus formed a delightful secluded retreat, which the inhabitants of the Abbey Grove villas enjoyed in common.

The invigorating charms of an early walk on a summer's morning need no description. The pure air, the genial sun, the twittering birds, the sparkling dew, and soft low breeze, all tend to exhilarate one's spirits, and to make the day pleasanter and happier throughout. All these experiences were mine on the day I write of. As I approached Abbey Grove and saw the houses peeping from out the surrounding trees, I commenced wondering as to what kind of a residence would be occupied by Mr. Robertson, how it would be furnished, what kind of people his wife and family would be like, and the kindred things that you speculate upon when going to visit a house for the first time. Last, but by no means least, as my walk continued I wondered what kind of a breakfast there would be to appease the appetite stimulated by the morning breeze.

I walked down a short avenue leading to the houses, and then began to wonder which of the half dozen villas I was bound for. This small community dispensed with numbers to their houses, nor did they even distinguish them by the ambitious and ridiculous names which you see stuck up on most suburban residences. No; nothing savoring so of the town for this group of country residences; they all called their several houses by the common name of Abbey Grove; and the stranger had to take his chances of having to go to each of them in turn before he found the particular one he sought. Fortune favored me, by sending across my path a traveling directory in the shape of a milkman, and in response to my inquiry as to which house was Mr. Robertson's I received the straightforward reply, "This one, one as I've just come from, sir." Walking up a path, I found the door invitingly open and the housemaid putting the finishing touches on the bell handle.

"Master is not down yet, sir," she replied to my inquiry as to whether he was at home, which, considering the time of day, really appeared an absurd question to ask the girl; but we get accustomed to use stereotyped phrases under some circumstances.

"Oh, then, I will come in and wait," I replied.

"What name shall I say, sir?" asked the girl.

"Just tell him Mr. Brookes has called, and he will understand."

So saying the girl showed me into a snug little breakfast-room, where the sunbeams and the fresh morning air seemed to be vieing with each other as to which should hold possession of the room; with such friendly rivalry were they streaming through two open French windows, which opened upon a tastefully arranged lawn and flower-beds outside. While noticing these things, the housemaid had gone up stairs to announce me; when something like the following dialogue ensued: "Please, ma'am, Mr. Brookes is down stairs."

"Mr. Brookes! Who is he?" was the response in a muffled female voice.

"I don't know, ma'am," the maid replied. "I never seen him here before. But he's a young gentleman, and says he'll wait till master comes down."

"Whoever can he be, and what can he want bothering here at this time of day?" continued the muffled voice; and thereupon the door was shut.

Now, this was not exactly pleasant to me, but when I reflected that most probably Mrs. Robertson would be unacquainted with her husband's invitation to me I thought it best not to be offended; so I commenced examining the pictures on the walls. They were not very interesting, and I soon concluded my inspection, and looked round for something else to occupy the moments, which began to hang rather heavily. The newspaper of the previous day was upon a small table by the window, so I took that up, just to pass away the time, and I was soon listlessly perusing the advertisements. I had not been sitting thus above a minute or two when I heard a slight rustling, as of a lady's dress; simultaneously came three or four light footsteps through the window into the room, and before I could look up from my paper, or rise from my seat, a musical voice accosted me with "Good morning, uncle; here is your button hole."

I started up in no little surprise at this greeting, which was evidently not intended for me; and there stood before me a fairy-like maiden of some sixteen summers, her brown hair falling loosely from a daintily-shaped head, her cheeks aglow with the healthy morning air she had been enjoying, and deepened, too, by a rosy blush, when she discovered her greeting had been unwittingly addressed to a stranger. She was standing before me holding the knot of flowers destined for her uncle's button hole—how I envied her uncle!—a very picture of health and life and happiness and beauty. Her expression of unrestrained enjoyment had changed in a moment to one of embarrassment and dismay, mingled with a gleam of amusement in her bright eyes as the humor of the awkward situation we were in broke upon her. An instantaneous mutual agreement seemed to flash between us. We both broke into a merry little laugh; and I often wondered what would have happened if we had not adopted this course, if, for instance, the young lady had passed on with a dignified coldness, and simple apologies and bows had passed between us! Our sudden introduction was, however, not destined to have this sudden ending. In a few moments we were chatting away like old friends. I fancied my fairy seemed to be actually pleased when I announced that I was going to stay for breakfast; and I had almost summoned up courage to ask her to present me in reality with the flowers she had undesignedly offered to me, when the entrance of the servant with the completing dishes for the breakfast table served as an excuse for her to leave the room.

She had scarcely gone through the door when I heard again the greeting, "Good morning, uncle," followed this time by an unmistakable sound, which made me long more than ever to be that girl's uncle! The door opened once more. I stepped forward to meet my employer, but suddenly paused, as a tall gentleman entered the room whom I had never seen before in my life.

He stood looking inquiringly at me after a sharp "Good morning." I was too embarrassed to make any response. My first thought was, "He is some visitor;" but in a few moments the awful truth dawned across my mind that this was in reality the owner of the house I was in, and by some means or other I had got into the wrong one. The situation was tremendous. I am naturally a cool character; but I was so taken by surprise and chagrin that I could only utter some confused apology about having been invited to breakfast by Mr. Robertson; that I had been directed to this house by some miserable misunderstanding; that I humbly apologized for my intrusion, and hoped he would pardon it. So speaking I made a frantic dash at my hat, not [illegible] my stupidity, at the [illegible] I [illegible] at the thought of [illegible] speaking again to that charming little lady, who in less than five minutes I found I was [illegible] in love with!

I said a hurried "good morning," and was trying to make a [illegible] attempt to smile as I left the room, when, would you believe it? That tall dark man burst out into a loud laugh. I felt ready to knock him down. I knew how my stupidity would be [illegible] discussed at the breakfast table before [illegible]; I felt my discomfiture and humiliation [illegible] but the open merriment at my expense [illegible].

A strange calm succeeded this storm. It was caused by some words uttered by my tormentor: "You really must forgive me. I could not refrain from laughing. My name is Robinson. Your friend Mr. Robertson lives in one of the other houses. We frequently get parcels and letters, and even callers come to the wrong house; but in all experience we have never had so amusing a mistake so early in the day as this one."

Now this explanation toned down my anger considerably; but the words which followed were like balm to my troubled heart. "Mr. Robertson will have finished breakfast by now. I cannot think of allowing you to go. Do me the favor of remaining here and breakfasting with us." So saying, he took my hat out of my hand and led me into the room again. Of course it did not need much persuasion to make me stop. Two minutes before I had been ready to knock this man over; I now thought him the kindest and most considerate fellow in the world.

[illegible] at the breakfast was delightful. I found Mr. Robinson and his wife a really genial kind-hearted people. I found their niece even more sensible, more genial and kind-hearted than they were; and when, after breakfast, I accompanied her and Mr. Robinson into their pretty flower-garden I received from her a rosebud for my buttonhole, which I kept for some years afterward. When saying good-bye I was perplexed by thinking how I should manage to see her again; it must be contrived somehow, I mentally resolved. Upon returning to town I lost no time in explaining "the situation" to my employer, Mr. Robertson, who rallied me good-naturedly upon the mistake, and upon what the consequences might be. Next week I was invited to a picnic at Mr. Robinson's, and went not only to it, but likewise to Mr. Robinson's house again and again before his niece returned to her home.

Four years have passed since that invitation to breakfast was given me, and that "fairy-like girl" is now my wife. That local milkman, bless him, got a handsome "tip" upon our wedding day.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, June 2.

There has been no change in wheat quotations for the past week. A very few transactions have occurred on a basis of $1 31¼@1 32½, the latter figure falling in the latter part of the week to induce holders to sell. The market may be quoted as firm at $1 32½ with no business doing.

The absence of any disengaged vessels in port, coupled with no movement of the reserve wheat in the hands of farmers, has produced such a stagnant condition of affairs that it is very hard to fix a certain status for freight rates for the immediate future. All of the ships which we predicted a month ago would arrive in May came to hand, except the Scottish Bard, which is now overdue, and in addition several that were set down for June arrival. Those now in port are having quick dispatch from here, but there is the usual delay for those in Astoria waiting for the complement of salmon to finish cargo. So far as known all of the ships due for June loading are already chartered, except two or three wooden ships, whose agents appear in no mood to press them on the market before arrival. Freights in San Francisco are reported to have stiffened after the late depression consequent to the arrival of a number of disengaged, and are now quoted at 80s, U. K., for iron and 75s for wood.

With no sales of wheat to record it does not seem possible that over 85s, U. K., would be paid for an iron ship here for June loading; but spot rates are now governed more by the condition and tendency of the Liverpool market than any other factor, and a depression there might, on an 85s or an advance to 90s without any other apparent reason for it.

The amount of wheat and flour in the country for shipment is computed at about 60,000 tons, and the vessel carriage for June and July will aggregate 30,000 tons, which will leave, as has been generally conceded, about 30,000 tons on hand to be carried into the new crop year.

We hear of charters being made for August and September loading at 75s, U. K., for iron ships, which indicates a high plane of rates for speculation and is the setting of [illegible] of the situation by the exporter.

The late rains have been very [illegible] in the Willamette valley and have renewed confidence for expectation of an average crop in that section. The news from Eastern Oregon is, however, that rain is badly needed there, and unless it soon comes there will be a short crop in that quarter, particularly in the Walla Walla valley.

The California crop, in the judgment of the best experts there, will not exceed two-thirds of last year's average, but it is agreed that enough will be carried into the new crop year of wheat over what is to make the surplus as great as last year's, [illegible] which aggregated twelve hundred thousand tons. They have passed the critical period as to northern winds and drought, and are now on the eve of harvest and their estimates are probably reliable, at least are generally conceded to be so.

Sales of wool during the past week have been considerable, some 125,000 lbs of Eastern Oregon having been sold at from 17c to 25c, which prices are today's quotations. Receipts are liberal and aggregate for the week from 1000 to 1200 bales. Transactions in valley wools are small as yet and offerings of this class have been too light to establish values fairly. We would quote 19 to 20c as the range of values for valley wool.

Home Produce Market.

Oats are very firm. The San Francisco market is better in proportion than this market and holders will do well to ship. Prices are steady in San Francisco with a prospect of going higher before harvest. Stocks of country flour are still very large in this city and sales are only made at liberal concessions. Stocks of hay held over are very large and prices must decline materially before the new crops come in. Present indications point to a very large crop this summer. The market is very weak. Bran is very plenty and buyers are purchasing only to meet present wants. Chop for the present is scarce. Shorts is in plentiful supply. The market is well supplied with bacon and sales are slow. Choice well trimmed and well cured shoulders and hams are wanted. Choice Oregon lard is scarce and wanted. Dried fruit seems to be in very liberal supply. We hear of an offer 450 boxes of dried apples, Plummer process, at 8c for which no buyers could be found, although the market here was well drummed. Dried plums are a drug on the market. Hides are steady at quotations. Receipts of country store butter are large and prices will decline before long. Choice Oregon dairy butter is in good demand. Receipts of Oregon cheese during the past week have been liberal and prices much weaker. California onions are arriving freely and prices are lower. Eggs hold their own at 18c. Chickens are scarce and choice fat hens are wanted. Salmon in half barrels is scarce. Old potatoes are unsalable.

SAN FRANCISCO MARKETS.

Full Review of the Produce and Merchandise Trade—Specially Reported and Telegraphed to The Oregonian.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 2.—Receipts of flour yesterday aggregate [illegible] quarter sacks, the bulk of which goes forward to China by the steamer [illegible] to-day. The vessel will take in all about 500 tons of [illegible] as a [illegible] of [illegible]. Receipts of wheat amounted to [illegible] centals, but include the cargoes of two vessels, aggregating 67,0[illegible], leaving but a small quantity to come on the market. The English wheat market was reported steady, with brilliant weather for growing crops. English and French country markets were firm. Here business was quiet and the situation entirely without change from yesterday's report. A sample of new wheat from [illegible] was shown here by M. Waters [illegible], was of good quality. Barley dull. There is no inquiry for barley, but no improvement in quotations can be reported.

Salmon is in active demand at an advance for all [illegible]. Some [illegible] for shipment by the outgoing [illegible] steamer have been made at the outside quotations.

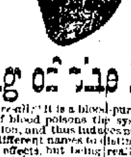
TROPIC-FRUIT LAXATIVE is the best preparation in the world for Constipation, Biliousness, Headache, Piles and all kindred Complaints. It acts gently, effectively, and is delicious to take. Cleansing the system thoroughly, it imparts vigor to mind and body, and dispels Melancholy, Hypochondria, etc. One trial convinces. Packed in bronzed tin boxes only.

Price 25 and 60 Cts. Sold by all Druggists.



King of the Blood

Is not a "cure-all;" it is a blood-purifier and tonic. Impurity of blood poisons the system, deranges the circulation, and thus induces many disorders, known by different names to distinguish them according to effects, but being really branches or phases of that great generic disorder, Impurity of Blood. Such are Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Constipation, Nervous Disorders, Headache, Backache, General Weakness, Heart Disease, Dropsy, Kidney Disease, Piles, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Skin Disorders, Pimples, Ulcers, Swellings, &c., &c. King of the Blood prevents and cures these by attacking the cause, Impurity of the Blood. Chemists and physicians agree in calling it "the most genuine and efficient preparation for the purpose." Sold by Druggists. $1 per bottle. See testimonials, directions, &c., in pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," wrapped around each bottle.

LIVER PILLS,

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is on the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it.
